Problem statement

Communications service providers lose over $38 billion due to fraud and network abuse each year.

Fraudulent phone payments are becoming a pricey problem.

Mobile transactions are newer than other types of channels and don't offer as many data points for fraud algorithms.

Mobile fraud involves a variety of scams that either persuade you to buy phone-related products/services that turn out to be substandard or non-existent; or to make phone calls or texts to premium services by accident; or to unknowingly sign up to expensive subscription services. There are a variety of frauds that target you on your mobile.
